Hi Steve,

I wanted to acknowledge your understanding of my personal time last night. I've received your notification about the need for you, Dale Hess, and Dennis Skinner, the computer experts, to perform an "imaging" process on an additional computer in my lab.

I remember that all the computers were previously taken out of the lab for imaging or scanning, so I'm not aware of any extra computers in the lab. However, if you and your team believe there's a need, you're welcome to return to the lab and proceed with the imaging or scanning tasks.

I have a meeting scheduled this afternoon between 1.30 PM and 4.30 PM. If my presence is required for the computer scanning, I can make myself available after 4.30 PM. But if it's not necessary for me to be there, please feel free to carry out the work in a smooth and unobtrusive manner.

To ensure the security of the computer systems, I'd appreciate it if you could inform me which computers your team intends to access. Additionally, if you come across any signs of spyware on any of the lab's computer systems, I'd like to be informed promptly. As you're aware, these systems hold sensitive proprietary research data and intellectual property that demand stringent safeguards. It's imperative to me that we uphold these measures and maintain the integrity of all the information stored on these computers.

Your assistance in this matter is greatly valued. Thank you for your cooperation.

Regards,
Ranga
